Castle to Castle is the English title of the 1957 novel by Louis-Ferdinand Céline, titled in French D'un château l'autre. The book features Céline's experiences in exile with the Vichy French government at Sigmaringen, Germany, towards the end of World War II. One of the characters which appears is the actor Robert Le Vigan, a fellow collaborator. For the first U.S. edition, translator Ralph Manheim won the 1970 National Book Award in category Translation.

Why aren't you reading Louis Ferdinand Celine? Few authors of the 20th century come close to the brilliance and sheer venom of the man. Nazi collaborator, anti-Semite, CASTLE TO CASTLE finds the author and his wife (and cat) on the run from the "fifis", the triumphant French Army, which is rolling through the countryside, wreaking a terrible vengeance upon any who actively cooperated with or aided the Germans.

Condemned by default (1950) in France to one year of imprisonment and declared a national disgrace, Celine returned to France after his pardon in 1951, where he continued to write until his death. His classic books include Journey to the End of the Night, Death on the Installment Plan, London Bridge, North, Rigadoon, Conversations with Professor Y, Castle to Castle, and Normance.

Neither the English title Castle to Castle nor the French title, Dun Chateau lautre (more literally, From one Castle to Another) seem like honest titles for this roman a clef. This thinly disguised autobiography embellished with (presumably) fictional details was written by Louis-Ferdinand Celine in 1957.

Celine is the genius of naturalism turning upon itself, disgusted with the universe, most of all disgusted with art. He is ""the inspired gravedigger of a decaying world,"" a Zola in a nightmare of twentieth century stench, hate, rage, betrayals, hideous swansongs. His novels are autobiographical effusions of fact and hallucination, held together by an ebullient misanthropy, a profound ...
