Prior to Java SE 8, your library might have had an interface, a factory for creating instances, and an abstract class to allow for future change. Now, all three features can be combined: instances can be created using static methods on interfaces, and there is no need for an abstract class with default methods on interfaces.

A Java library is just a collection of classes that have been written by somebody else already. You download those classes and tell your computer about them, and then you can use those classes in your code. This allows you to expand what Java can do and rely on code that other people have tested instead of doing everything yourself.
