Of Betty Smith's (1896 – 1972), four novels, it's for her first, A Tree Grows in Brooklyn (1943) that she's best remembered. Joy in the Morning, her second novel (1947) has many autobiographical elements, much like her first. It weaves its narrative around the challenges of New York's Irish immigrant families, their struggles with poverty, and one young woman's coming of age.

Chamberlain, Yvette Mimieux, Arthur Kennedy, Oskar Homolka. In 1927, Carl Brown marries Annie McGairy and goes to college but taking his young wife with him creates difficult challenges for both of them, for their parents back home and for the campus faculty.

Joy in the Morning (1965) - IMDb

Joy in the Morning is the story of Annie, who leaves Brooklyn just after her 18th birthday to marry Carl, a young law student at a Midwestern university. The first year of their marriage is the stuff of subtle drama as Annie and Carl work out their cultural and educational differences. The work is strongly autobiographical.
