Kiss the Cow by Phyllis Root. Kiss the Cow. Phyllis Root. When Mama May milks Luella, the family's cow, she sings a song and always kisses Luella on the nose. One day Annalisa decides to milk Luella but refuses to kiss her, because she is a "slobbery" and "bristly" cow. Mama May repeatedly tells Annalisa that she must kiss Luella, or she will no longer give milk, and the family will go hungry.

Even though Mama May patiently requested, and the hungry siblings begged, Annalisa, who was as stubborn as she was curious, refused to kiss the cow. Hillenbrand's (Down by the Station, 1999, etc.) illustrations are of mixed dry media: colored pencil, chalk, and ink layered on vellum, a technique that creates a richness and depth of field and gives an almost marbleizing texture to the figures.
