Multimodal discourse analysis is an approach that looks at multiple modes of communication such as text, color, and images. It is a method of discursive analysis that looks at not just how individual modes communicate, but how they interact with one another to create semiotic meaning. Kress (2010) states further that, "Using three modes in one sign - writing and image and colour as well - has real benefits.

~~Outlines~~ a theory of communication for the age of interactive multimedia and multi-skilling. Just as the demarcation lines between specialised jobs are blurring in contemporary society, so are the demarcation lines between modes and media of communication. This requires a new way of thinking - it requires a practice in which designers can freely move between different modes and media, and a theory whose concepts and ideas can do the same.

"Multimodal Discourse is the theoretical browser we need to navigate the exuberant multimodality of the highly mediated world in which we live. For students and specialists in communication or semiotics, cultural studies or linguistics, graphic design or anthropology this is the foundational theory of how meaning is made in this period of increasing semiotic fragmentation and cross-over."--Ron Scollon, Professor of Linguistics, Georgetown University

In composition studies, the term modes of discourse refers to the four traditional categories of written texts: narration, description, exposition, and argument. Also known as the rhetorical modes and forms of discourse.

~~The Traditional Modes of Discourse in Composition~~

Four core concepts are common across multimodal research: mode, semiotic resource, modal affordance and inter-semiotic relations. Within social semiotics, a mode is understood as an outcome of the cultural shaping of a material through its use in the daily social interaction of people.
