Devil" by Ian Rankin

Judging by this single book, Rankin is a journeyman writer who is good at both character and plot. His main man is a police detective named John Rebus, who is, in the cliched-hallowed literary tradition of crime fiction, a pensioner with no straight arrow boss to bust his chops.

THE DEVIL ABOUT?

Darryl Christie is savagely beaten in front of his own house and Clarke jumps onto the case. He didn't see his attacker/attackers, and there were no witnesses. Cafferty's name has to be on the suspect list, and as luck would have it—John Rebus calls at that moment for a small favor.
