Right Angle Viewfinder For Polar Scope. A right-angle eyepiece attaches to the polar scope and makes PA much more comfortable. The right-angle eyepiece I sometimes use with the Star Adventurer. Some models even provide a 2x magnification to make it easier to place Polaris on the reticle with higher precision.

Polar Alignment For Astrophotography | Aligning How-To Guide

A right-angled finder also gives a correct image, so you don't have to allow for a reversed polarscope reticle. If your polarscope has a 30mm diameter eyepiece, such as the common Sky-Watcher or Vixen ones, the tube can be fashioned from either a 35mm film can or a 36mm ABS waste-pipe stop.

A polar scope makes aligning the polar axis of this mount with the North celestial pole much easier. Celestron telescope mounts are equipped with a feature called All-Star Polar Alignment. Rather than using a polar scope, it uses a system of alignment stars. This method is handy if you own a Celestron mount, and Polaris is not in view.

Easy Polar Alignment for Astrophotography - [Step by Step]

Unfortunately the ' right angle ' is not illuminated and the view through the polar scope remains stubbornly dim. A good tip to cure this problem is to buy a Skywatcher Polar illuminator [20501] it also fits Celestron mounts. You do not need a polar scope and a 90 degree right angle if you use eyepieces on your telescope, the improvement will only be marginal.
