Until recently, the study of Scotland's economic and social development in the centuries before the Industrial Revolution has lagged behind research on England. Yet Scotland's story is a very remarkable one, and demands careful examination.

Scotland Before the Industrial Revolution: An Economic and ...

The Industrial Revolution in Scotland was the transition to new manufacturing processes and economic expansion between the mid-eighteenth century and the late nineteenth century. By the start of the eighteenth century, a political union between Scotland and England became politically and economically attractive, promising to open up the much larger markets of England, as well as those of the growing British Empire, resulting in the Treaty of Union of 1707. There was a conscious attempt among the

The key advance was in heavy industry, which from about 1830 took the industrial primacy from textiles, at a time when industry as a whole had replaced agriculture as Scotland ' s chief concern. Coal production rose, as did that of iron, with the hot-blast process (1828) of James Beaumont Neilson making Scottish ores cheaper to work.

Scotland - The Industrial Revolution | Britannica

The Industrial Revolution in Scotland. BY DAVID ROSS, EDITOR. Scotland had a traditional cottage industry producing linen, most exported to the Americas. After the American Revolution, this market collapsed, and the invention of the Water frame by Richard Arkwright meant that hand-worked cloth was no longer economically viable.
