Running records are used to collect information on young readers who are still reading aloud and working on basic skills (think: those who are at reading levels aa-J). A running record captures both how well a student reads (the number of words they read correctly) and their reading behaviors (what they say and do as they read).

Scoring a Running Record You can use the following scoring to assess a child's performance. 1. Count only the running words in a text. Running words do not include titles, subtitles, captions, and so on. 2. 3. Count each word in a skipped line as an error. Note Insertions add errors. A reader could have more errors than there are words on a line.
