This is the eBook of the printed book and may not include any media, website access codes, or print supplements that may come packaged with the bound book. Search Engines: Information Retrieval in Practice is ideal for introductory information retrieval courses at the undergraduate and graduate level in computer science, information science and computer engineering departments. It is also a valuable tool for search engine and information retrieval professionals. Written by a leader in the field of information retrieval, Search Engines: Information Retrieval in Practice , is designed to give undergraduate students the understanding and tools they need to evaluate, compare and modify search engines. Coverage of the underlying IR and mathematical models reinforce key concepts. The book's numerous programming exercises make extensive use of Galago, a Java-based open source search engine.

The second edition of Understanding Search Engines: Mathematical Modeling and Text Retrieval follows the basic premise of the first edition by discussing many of the key design issues for building search engines and emphasizing the important role that applied mathematics can play in improving information retrieval. The authors discuss important data structures, algorithms, and software as well as user-centered issues such as interfaces, manual indexing, and document preparation. Readers will find that the second edition includes significant changes that bring the text up to date on current information retrieval methods. For example, the authors have added a completely new chapter on link-structure algorithms used in search engines such as Google, and the chapter on user interface has been rewritten to specifically focus on search engine usability. To reflect updates in the literature on information retrieval, the authors have added new recommendations for further reading and expanded the bibliography. In addition, the index has been updated and streamlined to make it more reader friendly.

Search engines have become a key part of our everyday lives. Yet while much has been written about how to use search engines and how they can be improved, there has been comparatively little exploration of what the social and cultural effects might be. Like all technologies, search engines exist within a larger political, cultural, and economic environment. This volume aims to redress this balance and to address crucial questions such as: * How have search engines changed the way we organize our thoughts about the world, and how we work? * What are the 'search engine wars', what do they portend for the future of search, and who wins or loses? * To what extent does political control of search engines, or the political influence of search engines, affect how they are used, misused, and regulated? * Does the search engine help shape our identities and interactions with others, and what implications does this have for privacy? Informed members of the information society must understand the social contexts in which search engines have been developed, what that development says about us as a society, and the role of the search engine in the global information environment. This book provides the perfect starting point.

Since the introduction of the Amazon Echo, adoption of voice first technology has accelerated faster than any of its predecessors, including the telephone, the television, the computer, the internet, and the smartphone. By 2020, comScore predicts that 50% of searches will occur via voice and 30% of searches will be performed on a device without a screen. Digital marketers must adapt their search strategies to incorporate voice search. This book equips readers with an understanding of the current state of voice search, actionable tactics to prepare for voice search, and predictions on the future of voice search. Don't fall behind on one of the most important changes to search in history. -Amazon Echo owners spend more money on Amazon, with owners spending about 10% more than before they bought the Echo, per a study by NPD Group. -When voice assistants are developed, rather than source all their own information, they utilize many existing datasets such as recipes from Allrecipes and local business information from Google My Business. -By 2020, there will be 21.4 million smart speakers in the U.S., as they seem to be growing in popularity every day. The firm Mediapos estimates that about 30% of all searches will be done without the use of a screen by 2020.
