THE CREEPS is a completely satisfying conclusion to Connolly's Samuel Johnson trilogy, with all the humor we've come to expect from this series, plus a few extra scares. Samuel, his faithful dog Boswell, and his infernal friends seem to be living happily ever after in Biddlecombe... except that things aren't exactly right.

The Samuel Johnson series is so fun and easy to read, and it seems Connolly has a lot of fun with them (just read the footnotes and I think you'll agree). The characters are entertaining and the story lines are fun. Highly recommended, but read the other two (The Gates and The Infernals) first, or you'll be sorry.

This John Connolly book is part of a trilogy and each of the three books, beginning with The Gates, is so funny, so clever and well-written, and so surprising.
He reminds me of Terry Pratchett in this trilogy, which are not the grisly reads of his adult detective novels.
